Masonic Care Tasmania CEO's contribution acknowledged at Australia's most prestigious human resource awards

Masonic Care Tasmania CEO Daniel Findley has been named a national finalist for the Australian Human Resources Institute (AHRI) Lynda Gratton CEO Award. The Lynda Gratton CEO Award recognises CEOs who achieve positive results for their organisation through best-practice people management.

CEO Daniel Findley is very humbled to be named a national finalist for the prestigious Australian Human Resources Institute (AHRI) Lynda Gratton CEO Award.

"Being named as a finalist for this award is a strong acknowledgement of the 500-plus people I work alongside every day. The quality of care each person provides and their ongoing hard work, commitment and enthusiasm is key to the success of Masonic Care Tasmania," Mr Findley said.

"I would like to warmly congratulate my fellow nominees in this category, Corinne Bot (Founder & CEO of Polygot Group) and Naomi Wilson (Managing Director of Focus HR), who I know are both highly regarded and have extensive experience and influence in their respective organisations."

Daniel holds an impressive history of executive level leadership and board appointments, with more than 25 years international expertise in Europe, US and Australia. He has built a reputation for repeated success in organisational consolidations and turnarounds, leading performance and outcome-based for purpose organisations, and driving growth as a CEO and board director.

Daniel improves profitability, diversifies revenue streams, creates value-added programs, and increases visibility and reputations. For over 25 years, he has been serving his communities through for purpose work in caring for diverse industries, including the ageing population; child care; child protection; mental health; refugees and asylum seekers; employment services; and people with disabilities. Daniel is frequently recognised for developing creative programs to serve these multiple populations and client groups, and providing unwavering commitment to the organisations and communities he works with.

We look forward to hearing the outcome at the awards ceremony at the end of November.
